The French Fisheries.

The French fisheries are divided into the "great fisheries," for cod at Newfoundland, Iceland and in the North Sea ("le Dogger's Bank") carried on mostly by vessels from Boulogne, Dunkirk, Gravelines, Fecamp and St. Malo, and the home fisheries for all varieties of fish. The number of French doggers fishing in the North Sea in 1898 was 126: 186 were engaged at Iceland and 171 at Newfoundland. The cod fishing at Newfoundland has diminished rather than increased during recent years, and the Iceland and Dogger Bank fishery remains much about the same.
