REGULAR FISH FAMINE.

Boston and Gloucester Are Both Shy of Fresh Fish.

Only 58,000 Pounds Received at T Wharf This Morning.

Boston, and Gloucester too, for that matter has a fresh fish famine on its hands.

All last week, fresh fish were exceptionally scarce and prices rose to almost unprecedented heights. But one vessel reached Boston Saturday, but a goodly number are expected today.

The dealers there were doomed to disappointment, however, for when the bell rung, there were just six vessels in the dock and altogether they had but 58,000 pounds of fish, just about enough to make up one good off shore trip.

Just imagine Monday morning at T wharf, with every store bare, customers clamoring for fish and only 58,000 pounds for all the dealers to get a share out of. The situation is nothing short of a famine.

Prices for new goods, of course are sky high. New haddock brought $9 per hundred weight, cod the same and big hake fetched $10.

The lucky crafts are schs. Oliver F. Hutchins, Sadie M. Nunan, Minerva, Richard J. Nunan and Hockomock.

Sch. Lizzie M. Stanley, which has been out quite a while, is there from off shore, with 22,000 pounds. Her fish were not very new evidently as her haddock sold for $4.50.

NEARLY CAME TO BLOWS.

T Wharf Dealers Were Red Hot for Fish Yesterday.

Skippers Had Their Innings and Made Most of It.

Cod and haddock almost precipitated fisticuffs at T wharf, Boston, yesterday. The dealers were hard up for fish and the skippers knew it. The skippers had their innings, for they demanded big money for their catch of 60,000 pounds and held out till it was forthcoming.

"We've got you pat," sung out one of the skippers from the dock of a craft that looked like a section of Niagara Falls in zero weather. You've got to have fish and here's the goods. Put up or shut up."

The buyers representing the dealers made an absurdly low figure for a starter, and the skippers only swung their arms to warm their fingers and didn't hear, at least they didn't appear to notice what was going on. One buyer in sheer desperation raised the figures till he made it eight cents, and then the skippers began to take notice.

The figure went up to nine cents by fractions of a pound, and the fishermen finally concluded to let their fares go rather than parley. The buyers haggled and bargained and said things to each other, those who had bought what they wanted leaving the others on the caplog to argue to the bitter end.
