August 14.

Cape Breton Lobster Fishery.

The lobster fishing along the Cape Breton coast will this season show a marked decrease over previous years. Fishermen are at a loss to discover this and attribute the falling off to the fact that the lobster has migrated from the shores to deeper water. This branch of the fisheries this year, however, shows remarkable results along the northern coast of New Brunswick; along the Westmoreland coast the fishermen have made almost phenomenal catches. Many fishermen averaged $100 per day while one man in five days caught five tons of lobsters which netted him $360.

MILES OF DEAD HERRING.

Sighted by Ocean Liner on Grand Bank Recently.

Dead herring floated on the water for 15 miles in the path of the Danish steamer Texas, which arrived yesterday from Copenhagen. Capt. Anderson encountered the herring on the eastern edge of the Grand Banks. He is unable to say whether they were killed by a submarine disaster or a fishing vessel had foundered near by. A dory full of water adds plausibility to the latter theory.

The herring probably came from the Boston sch. Mary G. Powers which foundered in that vicinity some time ago. She was loaded with herring to bait the salt fishermen on the banks.
