TRAWLER IN NEAR MIXUP WITH WHALES

While returning home from South Channel fishing grounds Sunday, the Boston, beam trawler Comber, Capt. Jerry Shea, came near having a mixup with two big whales, which were floating on the ocean's surface. From a distance, the pair appeared to be a submerged wreck, and the trawler was proceeding cautiously, with the idea of getting a line on the supposed hulk. As the Comber neared the spot the whales, startled into action, lashed and spouted, then dived out of sight. Strangely enough, on this trip the Comber had aboard a whale's rib, 15 feet long, brought up from the bottom on Georges. The bone, whiteened and hard as stone, had evidently been in the water for years.

FEW ARRIVALS AGAIN TODAY

GENERAL SEAFOODS TAKES FIRST TRIP FOR FILLETING IN TWO WEEKS.

Arrivals of fresh fish were again few today, being confined to three of the shore trawlers and an off-shore dragger. The dragger, hailing for 40,000 pounds of fish, took out at the General Seafoods wharf, the first trip the company has taken for about two weeks, due to the changing over of machinery in the building. Gill netters had good hauls of large codfish yesterday afternoon. A Canadian boat brought 300,000 pounds of salt fish for the Frank C. Pearce Company during the night.
