Washington, April 1.—No gift of prophecy is required to see in advance that international negotiations like the London naval conference are almost sure to fail.

A country which is not afraid of some other country does not need to ask the latter to limit its armament before limiting its own. Such a request, in itself, is equivalent to an admission that the country which makes it is afraid to cut down unless the other cuts down, too.

Hence, when five sea powers' representatives meet to discuss limitation of their navies, the very fact that they do so proclaims their suspicions of one another.

Each delegation is after all the advantages it can get for the country it represents.

It genuinely desires all around reduction, to save money—but it wants
