N. S. Dried Fish Market

Recent information from Lunenburg is to the effect that the vessels which have been fresh fishing have had an unsuccessful winter. Many of them have not met their expenses, so that with a brighter outlook for dried fish a number of them intend going out on the early spring trip. It is thought that at least five or six vessels will start out on this trip the first week in March. Last year 12 Lunenburg fishing schooners were engaged in the early spring trip, locally known as the "frozen baiting" trip. It is thought that this year there will be about 18 so engaged. In view of the fact that there is apparently not sufficient Lunenburg bank fish on hand to take care of the West India market up to the first of June, there will be an excellent market for the catch made by the vessels on the early spring salt fishing trip.

The loss taken by the vessels engaged in the fresh fishing industry was caused by the very mild winter conditions which have made for over-production. As a consequence of this, the fresh fish business both in Canada and the United States is [illegible] next three months. The effect of the advance in Brazil has been a strengthening in the value of all dried fish, with the possibility of further advances in the West India markets.

The entire European situation is strengthening. Oporto continues to take larger quantities of dried fish than usual, a considerable portion of which importations no doubt find their way into Spain. The Italian government's buying commission has been forced to advance its ideas of price and has taken another 6000 quintals of Newfoundland cure. Supplies of Newfoundland cure are undoubtedly short.—Maritime Merchant.

On Mercy Errand.

The Coast Guard patrol boat Faunce was speeding through a rough sea last night to the trawler Dorchester, 160 miles off Provincetown, to take aboard a man who wants to be taken to Boston to the bedside of his dying child.

The man's name, and the details of the story were not given to Coast Guard officials. The Faunce, out on patrol, is expected to reach the Dorchester this morning and arrive in Boston late tonight.
