INTRODUCTION

South Carolina's Marine Game Fish Tagging Program (MGFTP) began in 1974 under the direction of David Cupka. Following Cupka, Charles Moore, Donald Hammond and Kay Davy assumed supervision of the program. Operated by the South Carolina Wildlife and Marine Resources Department's Office of Fisheries Management, it was initiated with a contribution from the Charleston based South Carolina Saltwater Sportfishing Association. Since 1991, it has received funding from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service's Sport Fish Restoration Act. This tagging program has proven to be valuable not only for the information gathered on different species of game fish but also for promoting conservation among saltwater anglers.

The program is unique in that it is the only state operated fish tagging program on the East Coast that encourages the direct participation of the public. The other large East Coast cooperative tagging programs are operated by the National Marine Fisheries Service. One program based in Miami encourages the tagging of billfish, and another in Rhode Island primarily tags sharks. Both of these programs have been operating successfully for over three decades.

Tagging fish is not a recent phenomenon. It was first mentioned in a fishing guide published in 1653 (Walton). Since the early 1940's, there have been numerous tagging operations conducted by scientists. It has only been in recent years that anglers have become involved in tagging the fish they catch. With the cooperation of anglers, a greater number of fish are tagged and much valuable information is gathered. This program, like other cooperative tagging programs, gives anglers the chance to assist in scientific research and also helps in conservation of fisheries resources.

Since 1974, nearly 6,000 participants comprised of recreational anglers, charterboat captains, headboat captains and commercial fishermen participated in the program. While most participants reside in South Carolina, fishermen from 40 states, Bimini, Canada and Japan have also participated. Anglers have tagged over 42,000 fish of 96 species representing 35 families. While this program targeted specific fish species, it also allowed anglers to tag within general categories, such as shark or grouper without any distinctions made for species. Nontarget species made up less than 1% of the total fish tagged and released.

Since its inception, the MGFTP has used seven types of tags. Through trial and error, two types of tags emerged as best suited for use by this program. The tags the program has used for the past several years were developed and manufactured in Australia by Hallprint Ltd. These tags are streamlined and constructed of non-toxic material. When properly applied, they minimize the tagging injury to the fish. Most fish recaptured even after several years after tagging have been reported in excellent condition with tags showing very little wear. The majority of tags were recovered with the legend and both sets of tag numbers clearly legible.

While the program has grown continuously for nearly two decades, it has only been during the last few years that it has developed into a major tagging program recognized worldwide. This has resulted from a combination of the public becoming more environmentally conscious and the establishment of bag limits and minimum and maximum size limits on an increasing number of marine game fish.

METHODS

Fishermen requesting to participate in the MGFTP for the first time are supplied with a kit containing five tags, an applicator and instructions. Anglers who have become active participants are given kits containing ten tags. Anglers receiving their first large fish tags are supplied with an applicator tip and instructions on how to assemble a tagging pole. Small fish tagging kits given to new participants contain an applicator ready for use.

To keep track of tag numbers, files are maintained with the angler's name, address and the assigned range of tag numbers. Fishermen receiving tagging kits are asked not to give them to other anglers without first notifying the tagging office. Anglers who choose not to use their tags are asked to return them. In order to remove them from the files, anglers are also asked to report any lost or damaged tags.

A brochure was developed to promote the program and to serve as an instructional guide. The brochure gives a brief history of the program, what steps to take if a tagged fish is caught, and how to tag large and small fish. Also included are instructions on how to construct a tagging pole for tagging large fish, and a list of the species of fish that are eligible for tagging. To aid the angler in identification, most fish are also pictured on the cover of the brochure. The common names of fish listed in the brochure are those recognized by the American Fisheries Society.

A system, implemented in 1991, awards anglers who report tag recaptures. The reward is a white, golf style cap with the tagging program emblem over the visor. One cap is given per recapture reported. Anglers reporting multiple recaptures are given the choice of receiving several caps or a single cap. Caps reported lost or stolen are not replaced.

All tags are yellow in color and are printed with the program's address, the word "reward" and a unique sequential tag code (see appendix). The tag code consists of a single letter followed by a six digit number printed on both ends of the tag in case one end is mutilated.

Before 1987, a cinch-up spaghetti tag manufactured by Floy Tag and Manufacturing of Seattle, Washington was used on fish weighing less than ten pounds (4.5 kg). The legend part of the tag measured 2.5 inches (6.4 cm). It was replaced by a cinch-up spaghetti tag with a legend measuring 4.5 inches (11.4 cm) manufactured by Hallprint, Ltd. of Australia. All of the tags used since 1987 are manufactured by Hallprint.

In 1988, a new dart tag design was introduced into the program. The dart tag consists of a 3.7 inch (9.3 cm) streamer with a single barb head 0.5 inches (1.2 cm) long. Anglers are advised to use the small dart tag on fish weighing less than ten pounds (4.5 kg). Dart tags are applied to fish with an applicator consisting of a sharpened steel cannula mounted in a 5/8 inch (1.7 cm) diameter wooden dowel 4.75 inches (12 cm) in length. The cannula is longer and slightly larger in diameter than the tag so that during application the tag is not restricted when the applicator is withdrawn. The tag is inserted below the spinous dorsal fin at a 45° angle that will allow the barb to anchor among the pterygiophores. Anglers are advised to pull lightly on the tag to ensure the barb's placement on the internal fin ray spine. The tag works best on fish weighing less than ten pounds. Larger fish usually have thick musculature surrounding the pterygiophores which prohibits proper insertion of the small dart tag.

Once in place, it is extremely difficult to remove the tag without causing injury to the fish or distortion of the tag streamer. Small fish are usually tagged in the boat. A soft, wet towel placed over the eyes and head of the fish helps to calm it. After tagging and measuring, the fish is gently released. The tagging process usually takes only a few seconds. If the fish appears stressed, anglers are advised to gently cradle the fish in the water until it revives. Small fish are revived by holding in the water and allowing water to pass over the gills or by moving the fish backward and forward in the water. Anglers are asked not to place their fingers in the eyes or gills of fish.

Anglers are asked to inspect fish caught bearing tags. If both the tag and the fish are in good condition, the angler is asked to record the tag number, the length of the fish and to re-release the fish with tag attached. If the angler can not read the tag number, the tag should be removed and a new tag placed in the fish. Anglers are requested to report pertinent information on recaptures and re-releases promptly.

When fighting large fish, anglers are advised to bring the fish to the boat as quickly as possible, but it should be "played" sufficiently in order to permit tagging without having to use too much force to restrain it. Large fish are left in the water alongside the boat. If necessary, a release gaff or lasso can be used to hold the fish close to the boat. Anglers are asked to inspect both sides of large fish for tags already in place. If a tag is present and the angler is unable to read the tag number, it should be removed and a new one implanted. Tag recoveries should be reported as soon as possible. Anglers are asked to use the larger stainless steel harpoon tag on fish weighing more than ten pounds (4.5 kg).

The harpoon tag consists of a streamer measuring 5.3 inches (13.5 cm) long attached to a stainless steel angled head 1.3 inches (3.3 cm) long and 0.3 inches (0.8 cm) wide. The streamer portion of the tag is constructed out of polyethylene over a stainless steel wire which connects the head to the streamer. The tagging process consists of placing the tag on a slotted stainless steel applicator which is mounted on a wooden or metal pole. A rubber band is used to hold the tag firmly to the tagging pole. To properly insert the tag, the angler takes a position slightly behind the fish and implants the tag in the dorsal musculature below the dorsal fin. If the hook can not be removed, the leader should be cut as close to the hook as is possible.

Following the release of a tagged fish, the angler is asked to record the location, date, species, length, weight, and angler's name and address on the tag card (see appendix). Anglers are encouraged to complete the tag cards at the time of tagging so the information will not be confused with fish subsequently tagged and to return the tag cards promptly.

When a card is received, it is assigned codes for the angler, species and location, and is categorized. Lengths and weights are converted into decimal equivalents and the card is checked for additional tag requests. Tag requests are filled as soon as possible. Tagging information is key punched into a database system. Once the data have been entered on computer and checked for errors, the card is filed.

When a recovery is reported, the original release information is retrieved for comparison with the recapture data. Minimum distance moved, net direction of movement, days at liberty and growth are calculated. This information is then provided to both the angler who tagged the fish and to the angler who reported the recapture. These letters of acknowledgement give the participants a full history of the fish. The angler who recaptured the tagged fish receives a cap bearing the tagging program logo as a reward.

RESULTS

From 1974 through 1992, cooperating anglers tagged over 42,000 marine fishes of 96 species representing 35 families (Table 1). Of these, 52 species in 20 families were considered target species.

Total		41981	3061
Non-targeted species		341	35
		42322	3096

Target species made up 99.1% of the total fish tagged and released.

In the first twelve years of the MGFTP, fewer than 500 fish were tagged annually (Figure 1). In 1986, with the enactment of red drum (Sciaenops ocellatus) and spotted seatrout (Cynoscion nebulosus) size limits, more anglers were inclined to tag their undersize fish before releasing. As tagging caught on, it carried over to other species and to all sizes of red drum and spotted seatrout. Once anglers were accustomed to tagging and releasing, it became a regular part of their fishing routine. Nearly 85% of the fish were tagged after 1986.

Participation and activity in the MGFTP increased steadily with little promotional effort (Figures 2 and 3). This program grew primarily as a result of anglers' interest in the concept of tag and release. Anglers not familiar with the MGFTP observed other anglers tagging and inquired how they could become involved. Sportfishing clubs and fishing related events requested program personnel to give talks and demonstrations related to tagging. Many fishing clubs integrated tagging into their tournament format and established award categories for those anglers who chose to tag their fish. Over the years, fish tagging has become a normal part of sportfishing along the South Carolina coast (Figure 4).

Along with sportfishing anglers, many charterboat and headboat captains have also been involved in tagging. Each year the number of fish tagged has increased except for the set back suffered as a result of hurricane Hugo, which struck the South Carolina coast in September of 1989. Tagging was expected to exceed 6,000 fish in that year but the hurricane hit during the peak fishing season for red drum and spotted seatrout. Most of the fish tagged in 1989 were tagged before the hurricane. Also, a hard freeze during late December of the same year did additional harm to the inshore fish populations.

During the latter part of 1989 and early 1990, many anglers were concentrating their efforts on repairs of their homes and businesses instead of fishing. As a result, inshore fishing and tagging were far below normal. In 1991, activity doubled over the previous year with over 8,000 fish being tagged. Activity continued to increase in 1992 with a 31% increase over 1991.

Coinciding with tagging activity, the number of tagged fish recoveries has increased each year (except following hurricane Hugo) and has remained at an overall recovery rate of approximately 7.3% (Figure 5). Tagged fish have been recovered as far north as Connecticut, as far west as Texas and as far south as Brazil (Figure 6). A great barracuda (Sphyraena barracuda) was recovered near Bimini, marking the first international recovery. A blue marlin (Makaira nigicans), tagged in May 1992 off Georgetown, was recovered 750 nautical miles (nm) (1388.7 kilometers) east of Brazil. This was the first documented transequatorial crossing of a tagged Atlantic blue marlin.

RESULTS BY SPECIES

The following is a listing of target species for which there were recaptures. (Also see Appendices III and IV.)

Red Drum
Sciaenops ocellatus

Red drum consistently dominated tagging activity making up 43.4% of the total fish tagged. The angling quality and desirable food value have made red drum one of the most targeted inshore species in South Carolina. They are available year-round in South Carolina estuaries and are found over a wide geographic range encompassing many habitats and salinities. A euryhaline species, they have been recorded from fresh water (0.2 ppt; Perret, 1971) to hypersaline conditions of 75 ppt (Simmons, 1957). Most fishing activity occurs in tidal creeks and rivers, but fish are also often caught in the surf along ocean beaches.

During 1974 to 1992, 18,366 red drum were tagged by participating anglers and 2,158 tags were recovered (Figures 7 A and B). Time at liberty ranged from 0 to 1818 days with a mean of 123 days. Nearly one third of the recaptures of tagged red drum occurred within the first month after tagging with 92.4% of all recoveries occurring within the first year. Only 1.3% of the recaptures occurred after the second year of liberty.

No large scale movement was indicated by adult red drum. However, several small red drum were recaptured outside South Carolina (Table 2). These fish ranged from 9 to 14 inches (22.9 cm to 35.6 cm) in length when tagged and grew to lengths of 12 to 19 inches (30.5 cm to 48.3 cm) at the time of recovery. Most movement was to the north, however, a few fish moved south. A 13 inch (33 cm) juvenile red drum went 180 nm (333.3 km) south to Ponce Inlet, Florida in 70 days. Most small red drum did not move from the tagging location. Minimum distances traveled ranged from 0 to 180 nm (333.3 km) with a mean of 0.4 nm (0.74 km).

It is speculated that some small red drum may utilize the Intracoastal Waterway when traveling north. Several recaptures occurred at various points along the waterway. One fish that was tagged in the Charleston area was caught and released twice in the waterway, each time at a more northern location. Its final known recapture was in North Carolina. These results indicate some exchange of juvenile fish between "stocks".

Approximately 90% of the fish tagged were juveniles or sub-adults. Nearly 35% of the total were below the minimum legal size limit. The establishment of year round size limits and creel limits have affected tagging. In particular, the red drum size limit enacted in 1986 required fish under 14 inches (35.6 cm) to be released. Consequently a small increase was seen in the number of fish being tagged in that size range. Over 75% of fish in the 14 inch size range were reported as being exactly 14 inches when tagged. Even though a fish 14 inches in length is legal, it appears many fishermen would rather release a borderline fish than keep it. A daily creel limit of one red drum per person per day for fish over 32 inches (81.3 cm) in length was enacted to protect adults in the brood stock. Even with the creel limit, very few adult fish were tagged and released. This was due primarily to adult fish being concentrated offshore where they were less accessible to anglers fishing from small boats. The recently (1993) enacted maximum size limit of 27 inches (68.6 cm) may, however, result in additional increases in numbers of red drum tagged since fish of that size are estuarine residents.

Nearly 90% of fish measuring fourteen inches or less were tagged from July to October. Seventy-four percent of fish over 14 inches were tagged from August to December. Tagging peaked for fish less than 14 inches in August and for fish over 14 inches in October.

Growth rates of red drum averaged about one and a quarter inches (3.2 cm) a month during the first year. Some fish, approximately 10 inches (25.4 cm) in length, were reported growing up to two inches (5.1 cm) in a single month during fall. Growth rate observations from tag recoveries in the Marine Game Fish Tagging Program were similar to growth rates determined in other states and in South Carolina (Wenner et al, 1990; Wenner, 1992).

Red drum recoveries made up 69.9% of the total tagged fish recaptured. The overall recovery rate for red drum was 11.8%. The recovery of tagged fish in specific locations was higher. Some of the individual creeks and rivers in the Charleston area had recovery rates as high as 26.8%. The overall recovery rate for the coast was lower than the reported rate for other tagging studies conducted by the Marine Resources Division due possibly to the geographically widespread tagging and releasing of fish by many anglers along the coast instead of the concentrated efforts carried out by fishery scientists. Most anglers tag only a few fish at a time, unlike the extensive tagging activity conducted by fishery scientists using nets to trap large numbers. Although many fish have been tagged by participating anglers, they are dispersed in small numbers throughout the coastal zone of South Carolina. The fact that fish are being caught by different methods (netting large numbers versus hooking individuals) may partly account for the difference in recapture rates between the MGFTP and other tagging studies.

Spotted Seatrout
Cynoscion nebulosus

Spotted seatrout were the second most targeted species by recreational anglers fishing South Carolina's inshore waters (Low and Waltz, 1988). Consequently, they also ranked second in number tagged (26.2% of the total fish tagged). During 1974 to 1992, 11,082 spotted seatrout were tagged by participating anglers and 273 tags were recovered (Figures 8 A and B). Time at liberty ranged from 0 to 1042 days with a mean of 80.8 days. Nearly 75% of the recaptures occurred within three months after tagging. Only six fish were recaptured after the first year of liberty.

Results showed that spotted seatrout were not inclined to move long distances. Of those recaptured, the average distance traveled was only 1.3 nm (2.4 km). The greatest distance achieved was with a 12 inch (30.5 cm) seatrout traveling 115 nm (212.9 km) from North Inlet to Topsail Beach, North Carolina in 85 days (Table 3). This was a very unusual recapture for the program since all previous distances traveled ranged from 0 to 7 nm (13 km). The results indicate that most spotted seatrout remain in South Carolina's inshore estuarine waters for their entire lives.

Only 2.5% of the spotted seatrout tagged have been recovered. This could have been due to several factors. Spotted seatrout are not as hardy as many other game fishes and may not survive the tagging process if conditions are not optimal. Seatrout flesh is soft, and if a tag is not applied correctly and locked into place behind the pterygiophores it may easily tear out. Tagging activity is widespread, and when examined in more detail the recovery rate is higher for individual locations. Spotted seatrout have a shorter life span than other game fish such as red drum, and therefore the tagged individuals would not be available for recapture as long. Seatrout are also a favorite prey of bottlenose dolphins (Tursiops truncatus), commonly found in South Carolina's coastal waters. Some participating anglers have observed dolphins actively feeding on schools of seatrout, and several tags that were originally applied to seatrout have been found washed up on beaches at Sullivan's Island, Morris Island and the Isle of Palms. Seatrout are also susceptible to cold induced mortality resulting from severe winter weather changes where the water temperatures drop quickly. The winter freeze of 1989 resulted in many reports of dead seatrout in shallow water.

Flounder
Bothidae

Between 1975 and 1992, 1,348 flounder of various species were tagged by participating anglers and 105 tags were recovered (Figures 9 A and B). Most tagging occurred in high salinity areas in Charleston Harbor, Murrell's Inlet, Breach Inlet and behind Pawley's Island. Few flounder were tagged in the early years of the program. With the introduction of a new tag design, tagging of flounder increased. Southern (Paralichthys lethostigma) and summer (Paralichthys dentatus) flounders are the species most commonly caught by recreational anglers and no doubt make up the majority of flounder tagged.

The average distance traveled by flounder was 1.73 nm (3.2 km) and ranged from 0 to 130 nm (240.7 km) (Table 4). The majority of recaptures occurred at the same location where the fish had been tagged. Days liberty ranged from 0 to 833 days with an average of 86 days. Nearly half of the tagged flounder recaptures occurred within a month of their release.

Striped Bass
Morone saxatilis

Participating anglers tagged 1,051 striped bass between 1980 and 1992 (Figure 10 A). Of these, 97 tagged fish were reported recaptured (Figure 10 B). Average time at liberty was 239 days with days at large ranging from 2 to 377 days.

The average distance traveled was 13.16 nm (24.4 km). Nearly two-thirds of striped bass recaptures occurred in the Combahee River. Most of the other recaptures were in the Sampit River. Fish tagged in the Combahee River generally stayed near the site of tagging and did not travel more than ten nautical miles (18.5 km). Five fish tagged in the Sampit River moved into the Pee Dee River system and traveled the full distance of the river until reaching the Blewitt Falls Dam approximately 130 nm (240.7 km) upriver (Table 5). One fish followed the North Santee River crossing through Lakes Marion and Moultrie to be caught in the Saluda River at Columbia 120 nm (222.2 km) inland.

Sheepshead
Archosargus probatocephalus

During 1975 to 1992, anglers tagged 1,028 sheepshead and 99 tags were recovered (Figures 11 A and B). Most sheepshead were recaptured at their release site. The average distance moved was 1.3 nm (2.4 km) and ranged from 0 to 35 nm (64.8 km). All recaptures occurring 18 nm (33.3 km) or more from the tagging site were ingresses from offshore or nearshore structures to inshore creeks or rivers. Two of the fish had been tagged at offshore structures during the month of March and were then recaptured inshore in May and October. This supports the belief that some sheepshead over-winter offshore and move inshore during spring.

The average time at liberty was 63 days and ranged from 0 to 546 days. Nearly 60% of the recaptures were within the first month after tagging. Several sheepshead have been recaptured, re-released and then caught again in the same location indicating sedentary behavior during temperate conditions.

Spanish Mackerel
Scomberomorus maculatus

Several Spanish mackerel tagged in South Carolina were recaptured in North Carolina and Virginia. As this species migrates north and south past the South Carolina coast they frequent the bays and sounds making them available to small boat fisherman.

From 1981 to 1992, anglers tagged 854 Spanish mackerel and 9 were reported recaptured (Figures 12 A and B). The average time at liberty was 80.0 days and ranged from 34 to 147 days. The average minimum distance traveled was 173.3 nm (320.9 km) and ranged from 0 to 380 nm (703.6 km). All Spanish mackerel recaptured had been tagged in Charleston Harbor, at the Charleston jetties or at the Georgetown jetties (Table 6). Most had been tagged during late spring or early summer and were recaptured during late summer or early fall off North Carolina.

All fish that were recaptured had been previously caught by casting and not by trolling. Small fish which were caught by trolling and then tagged may not have survived.

Great Barracuda
Sphyraena barracuda

Between 1974 and 1992, cooperating anglers tagged 671 fish and 26 were reported recaptured (Figures 13 A and B). The average number of days at liberty was 274.5 and ranged from 13 to 1009 days. Nearly 75% of the recaptures occurred within one year after release.

The average minimum distance traveled was 88.8 nm (164.4 km) and ranged from 0 to 480 nm (888.8 km). All large scale movements were to the south (Table 7). All fish recaptured off the East Coast of Florida were taken in fall and winter and had been tagged off South Carolina during August.

A 24 inch (70 cm) barracuda tagged in August off Charleston was recaptured nearly three years later off Bimini. This was the first fish tagged in this program to be recaptured outside of the United States. It had grown approximately 17 inches (43.2 cm). The boat captain reported the fish to be in excellent condition with the tag wound completely healed.

Bluefish
Pomatomas saltatrix

Participating anglers tagged 663 bluefish between 1975 and 1992 and reported the recapture of 18 tagged fish (Figures 14 A and B). The average number of days at liberty was 65.6 and ranged from 1 to 270 days at large. Over 50% of the fish were recaptured less than a month after tagging. Most of the bluefish tagged were less than eighteen inches in length.

Distances traveled by bluefish ranged from 0 to 345 nm (638.8 km) and averaged 105 nm (194.4 km). Northern recaptures (off North Carolina) occurred during the summer and fall months and southern recaptures (off Florida) occurred during the winter months (Table 8). Most fish recaptured after traveling long distances had been tagged over artificial reefs.

King Mackerel
Scomberomorus cavalla

There were 661 king mackerel tagged between 1974 and 1992 (Figure 15 A). Of these, eight were reported recaptured (Figure 15 B). The average time at liberty was 505.4 days and ranged from 39 to 1294 days. The minimum distances traveled ranged from 10 to 390 nm (722.1 km) and averaged 145.1 nm (268.7 km).

Fish tagged off South Carolina during August were recaptured off South Florida during December and May (Table 9). Three fish were recaptured during February, March and April off the South Carolina and North Carolina coasts.

Black Sea Bass
Centropristis striata

Anglers and biologists tagged 618 black sea bass from 1977 to 1992 (Figure 16 A). There were 55 tag recoveries reported (Figure 16 B). The average time at liberty was 47.7 days and ranged from 2 to 377 days. Half of the recaptures occurred less than one month after tagging. In the first two months after tagging 79% of the recaptures had been reported.

The average distance traveled was 0.95 nm (1.76 km) and ranged from 0 to 125 nm (231.5 km). With the exception of one fish that moved from Murrell's Inlet to Savannah (Table 10), most fish were recaptured at the same location where they were tagged.

Amberjack
Seriola sp.

During 1975 to 1992, 537 amberjack were tagged and 35 were reported recaptured (Figures 17 A and B). The average time at liberty was 583.1 days and ranged from 39 to 1599 days. Approximately two-thirds of the fish recaptured were tagged off South Carolina during the fall months. Over half of the recaptures occurred within the first year after tagging. One amberjack tagged at Savannah Light Tower was recaptured 1048 days later just 6.3 miles away from its release point.

An amberjack tagged off Charleston moved to the west coast of Florida to be recaptured off Apalachicola. It had been at large for nearly 4.4 years. This documented the first migration of an amberjack (tagged in this program) into the Gulf of Mexico.

Minimum distances traveled ranged from 0 to 640 nm (1185 km) with an average of 245.9 nm (455.3 km). All recaptures occurred south of the tagging locations (Table 11). Many amberjack were recaptured off South Florida within the same two-month period (mid-April to mid-June) in different years. Most of the fish reported recaptured from this area appeared to be in spawning condition at the time of recapture. Amberjack are thought to spawn off Southeast Florida during April and May.

Crevalle Jack
Caranx hippos

During 1974 to 1992, 515 crevalle jack were tagged and 5 were reported recaptured (Figures 18 A and B). Two fish were recovered off South Florida (Table 12). The average time at liberty was 32 days and ranged from 0 to 75 days. All of the fish that were recaptured had been tagged in inshore waters during late August and September.

Crevalle jack frequent Winyah Bay and Charleston Harbor during mid-summer to early fall. They are seen traveling in large schools in Charleston Harbor appearing often at the surface. Because of the fish's hard fighting ability, anglers tagging these fish often have to resuscitate them before they are released.

Atlantic Sailfish
Istiophorus platypterus

Participating anglers tagged 463 Atlantic sailfish during 1974 to 1992. Seven tagged fish were recovered (Figures 19 A and B). Average time at liberty was 310 days and ranged from 27 to 862 days. Average distance traveled was 199.25 nm (368.9 km) and minimum distances traveled ranged from 17 to 570 nm (31.5 to 1055.4km).

The first recapture of a billfish tagged off South Carolina occurred in 1990 (Table 13). A sailfish tagged during the last tournament of the 2nd annual Governor's Cup Series on June 22, 1990 was recaptured off Miami 102 days later. The Governor's Cup Billfishing Series, which encompasses the major billfish tournaments, strongly promotes the tag and release of billfish and provides a major boost to the tagging program by encouraging anglers to tag and release billfish.

Another sailfish, tagged in the Florida Keys, was recaptured nearly two years later off Grand Isle, Louisiana. This marked the first western movement of a billfish tagged in this program.

Gag
Mycteroperca microlepis

Between 1975 and 1992, anglers tagged 428 gag primarily caught in the waterways and estuaries of South Carolina (Figure 20 A). Most of the fish tagged were juveniles. Of the 22 fish recaptured (Figure 20 B) most were caught in the same place they were tagged. Only one recaptured fish moved from the area where it was tagged. A 12 inch (30.5 cm) fish was tagged 30 nm (55.5 km) offshore from Murrell's Inlet and was recaptured at the Garden City Pier.

The average time at liberty of tagged gag was 22.7 days and ranged from 0 to 119 days. Approximately 80% of the recaptures occurred less than one month after tagging.

Requiem Sharks
Carcharhinidae

Cooperative anglers tagged 405 requiem sharks of various species between 1975 and 1992 (Figure 21 A). Of those tagged, 23 were reported recaptured (Figure 21 B) with minimum distances traveled ranging from 0 to 315 nm (583.3 km) (Table 14). The average distance traveled was 48 nm (88.9km). Days liberty ranged from 0 to 2956 days with an average of 165.1 days. With the exception of one shark, all of the recaptures were caught within the first six months after tagging.

One shark was recovered over 8 years after tagging. It was estimated to be 13 inches (33 cm) when tagged and had grown to an estimated 24 inches (61 cm) when recaptured. Although no identification was given, most likely this was a male Atlantic sharpnose shark. This is based on the small size at tagging, the number of years at large and the fact that male Atlantic sharpnose sharks mature at a smaller size than females. The recapture of this shark marked the longest time at liberty for any fish tagged in this program.

Atlantic Spadefish
Chaetodipterus faber

Anglers and biologists tagged 397 spadefish between 1975 and 1992 and reported the recapture of 3 tagged fish (Figures 22 A and B). The average time at liberty was 34 days and ranged from 11 to 47 days. All three fish were recaptured at the same place they were tagged: Georgetown reef, Kiawah reef and Surfside Pier.

Several fish have been reported with tag heads (minus the streamer) embedded near the dorsal fin. It is speculated that the gregarious nature of this fish may lead them to bite at the tag streamer or that they may cut the tags off by rubbing on rocks or reef structures.

Black Drum
Pogonias cromis

Between 1980 and 1992, 350 fish were tagged and 57 fish were recaptured (Figures 23 A and B). This represents a recapture rate of 16.3%, the highest in the program. Most of the fish were recaptured in the same area they were tagged less than a month after tagging. The average time at liberty was 64.2 days and ranged from 1 to 353 days. Minimum distances traveled ranged from 0 to 172 nm (318.5 km) and averaged 7.3 nm (13.5 km). Fish showing movement were recovered outside of South Carolina (Table 15). Although previously thought to be nonmigratory, black drum stocks may be shared with surrounding states.

Southern Flounder
Paralichthys lethostigma

Anglers tagged 272 fish between 1979 and 1992 and reported the recapture of 22 fish (Figures 24 A and B). Half of the recaptures occurred within the first month after tagging. The average time at liberty was 120.7 days and ranged from 0 to 454 days. Minimum distances traveled ranged from 0 to 20 nm (37 km) with and average of 1.1 nm (2 km). All but one of the recaptures occurred in the Charleston area, mostly in the Charleston Harbor.

Blue Marlin
Makaira nigricans

During 1974 to 1992, 254 fish were tagged by cooperating anglers (Figure 25 A). Three blue marlin have been recaptured (Figure 25 B). The average time at liberty for recovered fish was 226.7 days and ranged from 47 to 390 days. The first two blue marlin recaptures had been tagged on the same day at the same location by different boats participating in the Georgetown Invitational Billfish Tournament. One was recaptured 47 days later 205 nm (379.6 km) north. A double hook lure had been left in the fish's jaw when it was originally tagged. The hooks were not in the fish's jaw when it was recaptured 47 days later and the captain reported the fish to be in excellent health. It was re-tagged and released.

The second recapture occurred 390 days later and was caught 190 nm (351.8 km) south of where it was tagged. This fish was also re-tagged and released by the captain. It was caught during a billfish tournament which gave points for tag and release.

A third blue marlin was recaptured after being tagged in the same general area as the first two but a year later. It was recaptured by a Japanese longline vessel fishing for tuna. The fish traveled a minimum distance of 4300 nm (7961.9 km) to be re-caught 750 nm (1388.7 km) off the coast of Brazil. The recapture of this fish documented the first equatorial crossing of a tagged Atlantic blue marlin (Table 16).

Blacktip Shark
Carcharhinus limbatus

Anglers tagged 219 blacktip sharks between 1979 and 1992 and reported the recapture of 6 sharks (Figures 26 A and B). The average time at large was 24.2 days and ranged from 4 to 42 days. The sharks were recaptured in the same locations they were tagged.

It is possible that some sharks reported as "blacktip" may have been Atlantic sharpnose sharks. Anglers often confuse the two species because of the black tipped fins found on small Atlantic sharpnose sharks.

Cobia
Rachycentron canadum

Between 1974 and 1992, anglers tagged 209 fish and 16 were recaptured (Figures 27 A and B). Cobia were at large between 11 and 783 days with an average of 267.1 days. The average distance traveled was 128.2 nm (237.3 km) and minimum distances traveled ranged from 0 to 1265 nm (2342.3 km).

One cobia released off Charleston traveled around Florida and was recaptured off Horn Island, Louisiana (Table 17). This was the first documented case of cobia migrating from the Atlantic into the Gulf of Mexico.

Tarpon
Megalops atlanticus

Anglers tagged 151 tarpon between 1982 and 1992 and reported the recapture of one fish (Figures 28 A and B). Most of the tarpon tagged were small individuals that had been caught in impoundments.

One was recaptured in Rantowles Creek after being at large 18 days and traveling 16 nm (29.6 km). It had been tagged by a school group conducting a research project near the Coast Guard Base at Folly Beach. After tagging numerous tarpon trapped in an impoundment, the school group released the fish at the north end of Folly Beach.

Little Tunny
Euthynnus alletteratus

Between 1974 and 1992 anglers tagged 148 little tunny and reported the recapture of one tagged fish (Figures 29 A and B). The fish was at large for 74 days and was recaptured 420 nm (777.7 km) south of where it was tagged (Table 18).

Anglers often call this fish "bonita", although the true Atlantic bonito occurs in this area but is usually much smaller.

Atlantic Sharpnose Shark
Rhizoprionodon terraenovae

Cooperative anglers tagged 137 Atlantic sharpnose sharks between 1976 and 1992 (Figure 30 A). Only one was reported recaptured (Table 19) and (Figure 30 B).

Juveniles of this species are commonly mistaken for small blacktip shark by some anglers. Anglers reported tagging "blacktip" sharks as small as twelve inches in length but the size at birth for true blacktip sharks is 23 to 26 inches (58.4 to 66 cm). The size at birth for Atlantic sharpnose sharks is 10.5 to 16 inches (26.7 to 40.6 cm). This species rarely exceeds 36 inches (91.4 cm) maximum length.

Dolphin
Coryphaena hippurus

Anglers tagged 103 dolphin between 1974 and 1992 (Figure 31 A). Only one was reported recaptured (Figure 31 B). It had been tagged off Stuart, Florida and was recovered 67 days later in the same area.

Most of the dolphin tagged were small individuals found schooling together. Dolphin along with yellowfin tuna and wahoo were commonly caught by anglers targeting billfish. However, because of their high desirability as food fish they were not commonly tagged and released.

Florida Pompano
Trachinotus carolinus

Between 1975 and 1992, cooperating anglers tagged 79 Florida pompano (Figure 32 A). Three tagged fish were recovered less than two months after tagging (Figure 32 B). One was recaptured the day it was tagged at Pawley's Island. Another was caught two days after it was tagged off the Garden City Pier. The third fish was recaptured a minimum distance of 400 miles from where it was tagged just 39 days earlier (Table 20).

Bonnethead
Sphyrna tiburo

Anglers tagged 55 bonnethead sharks between 1986 and 1992 (Figure 33 A). Only one was reported recaptured (Figure 33 B). It was caught by the same person who had tagged it minutes earlier while fishing in the Broad River.

Scamp
Mycteroperca phenax

Between 1987 and 1992, cooperating anglers tagged 28 scamp (Figure 34 A). Most of these were tagged by captains and mates of head boats. Two fish were recaptured and re-released by a cooperating head boat (Figure 34 B). Both fish had been tagged on the same day and were recovered on the same day 49 days later. They had moved approximately 12 miles (22.2 km) from the site where they were tagged.

Smooth Dogfish
Mustelus canis

Cooperating anglers tagged 24 smooth dogfish sharks between 1979 and 1992 (Figure 35 A). Only one tagged shark was reported recaptured (Table 21) and (Figure 35 B). It was recaptured by a commercial fishing vessel using a sink net in shallow water.

Wahoo
Acanthocybium solanderi

Between 1974 and 1991, anglers tagged 16 wahoo (Figure 37 A). One fish was recaptured nearly a year after it was tagged (Figure 37 B). It had been tagged off Charleston and was recaptured in the same general area.

Lemon Shark
Negaprion brevirostris

Cooperating anglers tagged 13 lemon sharks between 1980 and 1991 (Figure 38 A). Two were recaptured less than a month later at the same location where they were tagged (Figure 38 B).

DISCUSSION

Data generated by this program have been used in making fisheries management decisions not only in South Carolina but also in surrounding states. Many of the fish tagged in this program are migratory and therefore are found off South Carolina's coast only part of the year. Results have shown amberjack tagged off South Carolina during midsummer are found off South Florida during April and May. They have been reported in spawning aggregations during this time. Information on the recapture of amberjacks involved in spawning was provided to the National Marine Fisheries Service in Miami at their request. Later, a management regulation was enacted to protect the spawning aggregations occurring off South Florida (SAFMC, 1991).

Information on tagged king mackerel, cobia and Spanish mackerel has also been made available to the National Marine Fisheries Service for use in making management decisions regarding these species. The South Atlantic Fisheries Management Council has utilized data generated by this program in developing management plans for red drum and spotted seatrout.

This program gained international recognition with the first documented recapture of a tagged Atlantic blue marlin making a transequatorial crossing. While several tagged blue marlin have made transatlantic crossings and have been recaptured off the west coast of Africa, none had crossed the equator. Only subsequent recaptures will determine whether this was a fluke or if the blue marlin found off the East Coast of South America during the winter months are the same fish found off the East Coast of North America during the summer. If future recaptures of tagged fish occur off South America, international regulations will need to be addressed.

Notes on Tag Selection

Tags with a yellow color are used in this program primarily because it is a light color that contrasts well with the black printing and does not resemble natural parasites that often have a pink or red color. Also, Broadhead (1959) and Blunt and Messersmith (1960) presented data which indicated yellow tags were easier for fishermen to see than other colors.

The small dart tags, constructed of a polyethylene streamer bonded to a nylon head, are an improvement over the polyvinyl tags which fell apart easily. The chemical characteristics of the polyethylene tag make it a logical choice for tagging game fish. Not only is it non-toxic to fish, but it is very resistant to breakage at low temperatures and distortion at high temperatures. This is very important because some anglers store their tag kits in areas subjected to temperature extremes.

Initially an angler may have difficulty when applying the dart tag, but with experience an angler can detect when the barb passes over the pterygiophores. Once in place it is extremely difficult to remove the tag without causing injury to the fish or distortion of the tag streamer.

Notes on Tag Failure

While this program is operating smoothly now, it, like all other tagging programs had its share of problems. Trial and error has determined the best methods and types of tags for anglers to use. During early studies, Petersen disc tags were found being engulfed by new tissue growth. Dart tags manufactured by Floy Tag and Mfg. were found to fall apart over a 3 to 6 month period as the glue connecting the head of the tag to the streamer lost adhesion. Separation of tags produced by Floy Tag and Mfg. was also reported by Bruger (1981) and Davis (1978). Cinch-up spaghetti tags, also produced by Floy Tag and Mfg., often turned black or accumulated barnacles and masses of algae as reported by Davis (1959). Problems with an early design of large fish tag were that the legend was easily abraded off and the legend sleeve fell off the streamer as the brass restraining clip holding the legend in place disintegrated.

In the mid 1980's, a new tag manufacturing company in South Australia (Hallprint, Ltd.) introduced an assortment of streamlined, durable, simple to apply, and easy to read tags. This tagging program uses two of their designs. They have been in use for seven years and have held up without any design flaws. Because of their design they are much easier and quicker to apply, making them ideal for a public tagging program. If applied properly they have the potential of enduring throughout the fish's lifetime. The materials used in making the tags are non-toxic and are extremely durable under all types of conditions. Hallprint, Ltd. has been very willing to work with researchers on tag design.

Additional Information from Tag Card Remarks

After processing tag cards, the cards are retained because additional remarks are frequently made about the fish tagged. It is interesting to find out that an angler may have reported a fish to be in poor condition when released and then later it is recovered in good condition. There have been many cases involving large and small fish in which the angler reported the fish would probably die only to have it caught again days to years later in good health. It is truly remarkable to learn of the accounts of fish which bear mortal injuries (such as the loss of a fin or large section removed from the body such as a shark might cause) which have healed. Most of the fish have not only survived but have flourished.

Through tag and release, information is also being gathered on the ability of fish to get rid of hooks embedded in their mouths or intestines. A blue marlin was recaptured just 47 days after it had been tagged and released with a double hook rig left in its mouth. At the time of recapture the captain removed his hook before he re-tagged the fish. He stated he did not find any other hooks embedded in the fish's jaw. There have been other cases where fish have swallowed hooks and were later recaptured with only small parts of a hook remaining or either a badly deteriorated hook. Most fish appeared in good health despite the presence of a hook.

There is much controversy over which type of hook is best to use when tag and release fishing. Some anglers advocate barbless hooks while others choose to use treble hooks (they say fish are less likely to swallow treble hooks). Some anglers feel it is best to use non-toxic stainless steel hooks in case the hook is swallowed. There is an on-going debate over how quickly metals deteriorate in saltwater. Some anglers feel other metals do not break down any quicker and could be toxic to the fish. Regardless of the type of hook used, it is best to cut the line as close to the hook as possible on a gut hooked fish.

Popularity of Tag and Release

As fisheries conservation becomes a major concern of fishing tackle manufacturers, they are contributing more of their time and resources to promote tagging. More and more of their advertisements encourage tag and release fishing. Also, numerous articles on tagging are appearing in popular fishing magazines. It is difficult not to find at least one article or reference each month praising the merits of tag and release fishing.

Sportfishing tournaments have also joined in the promotion of tag and release fishing. Trophies and "ecology" awards are given to anglers who participate by tagging fish during competitions. In some areas, tag and release only tournaments are gaining in popularity. It is speculated more tournaments will be taking this innovative approach.

This program has received worldwide recognition with its inclusion in the International Game Fish Association's listing of tag and release programs for marine fishes. Also, Australian author Peter Goadby referenced the MGFTP as a major tagging program in his book on saltwater gamefishing (Goadby, 1991). It is regularly mentioned in national magazine articles.

While this program is an effective, low cost way to gather fisheries information, it also gives many anglers immense pleasure. Some anglers now plan their fishing day with the intent of tagging every fish they catch. Others even forego fishing if they find they are out of tags. One angler tagged 800 fish in one year and many others have tagged 500 or more in a year. Overall, this program has made many anglers become more aware of and active in fisheries conservation.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I would first like to thank all the many anglers who have participated by tagging and releasing their fish and those who reported tag recaptures. Without their cooperation, dedication and enthusiasm this program would not have been possible.

David Cupka is to be commended for having the foresight to start a state operated public tagging program. Under David's direction and with initial funding from the South Carolina Saltwater Sportfishing Association this program was born. I would like to thank Charles Moore for his support and suggestions. Donald Hammond is sincerely thanked for providing guidance and for his dedication to promoting the program and seeing that it flourished.

Also thanked are Foster Folsom, Hal Crow, Kirk Kirkland, Jay Bracey, Barclay McCurdy, Tom DuPre and Shelly Smith for providing invaluable assistance to keep the program operating smoothly.

I would also like to thank Hope Mixson, Emily Schroeder, Pat Causby and Stephanie Baughman for all the time and aggravation that went into typing the tables in the appendices. Karen Swanson is thanked for preparing the graphs and figures. I am also grateful to Wayne Waltz, Dr. Mark Collins and Dr. Charlie Wenner for their critical review and suggestions regarding this manuscript.

A very special thanks to all the sportfishing clubs, businesses and individuals who have donated their time and resources to nurture this program and make it successful.
