THE SPRAY ARRIVES.

Has Only a Small Trip of Haddock This Time.

Collided with Two Steamers in Boston Harbor.

The steam otter trawler Spray, which sailed a few days ago after being laid up for a long time and thoroughly overhauled, arrived at Boston yesterday afternoon with only a small fare, about 30,000 pounds of fresh fish, mostly haddock.

On the way up Boston harbor the Spray figured in two collisions, owing to the dense fog. The first was with the Norwegian steamer Tancred, and which sailed from Boston on Wednesday evening, anchored in Lighthouse channel where she remained until 10 yesterday morning before proceeding on her way to Louisburg. The collision carried away the Spray's foretopmast, the hawse pipe and broke some of her plates. The Tancred also had some of her plates damaged.

Capt. Carroll of the Spray declares that those on the steamer were making no effort to warn other vessels of her position either by ringing a bell or sounding her whistle, and he was not aware that she was anchored in the channel until it was too late to avoid a collision.

The Spray also ran into the United States engineer's steamer Executive. This was a short time after the first accident and occurred between Nix's mate and Long Island. The Spray's stem struck the Executive on the port side, cutting through the latter's guard and inflicting other damage which it will cost about $300 to repair.

BROKE THREE DORIES.

Portland Schooner Had Extra Share of Swordfish Fights.

With three dories punched in and broken by swordfish, sch. Albert W. Black, Capt. Granville Johnson, made her way into Portland yesterday from a swordfishing trip.

The Black had been out about three weeks and brought in 83 swordfish, some of them very large. Two weighed over 400 pounds apiece, and it was in getting these that the dories were punctured.

The bottom of one of the dories was ripped out by the fish and the men in it were compelled to jump into the water to keep it from sinking.

Yawning Fishes.

It is not generally known that fish yawn. The writer saw a turbot yawn twice and a cod once, the latter being one of the widest yawns accomplished by any animal of its size. The yawn of a turbot, being something not commonly seen, deserves particular description. A turbot's mouth is twisted on one side, rather as if it had belonged to a round fish which some one had accidentally trod on and squashed half flat. The yawn begins at the lips, which open as if to suck in water. Then the jaws become distended, and it is seen that this is going to be a real, genuine submarine fish's yawn. But the yawn goes on, works through the back of its head, distending the plates of the skull, and comes out at the gills, which open, show the red inside, are inflated for a moment, and then, with a kind of stretching shiver of its back, the fish flattens out again, until, if unusually bored, it relieves itself by another yawn.—Pearson's Weekly.
