CAPE SHORE STRIKE.

Meant Great Deal to Nova Scotia Mackerel Catchers.

Fish Schooled Off Shore but No Seines Were Ready.

In speaking of the recent strike of mackerel on the Cape Shore, the Halifax Chronicle of Friday says:
"No large hauls of mackerel Wednesday have been reported. The fish were schooling in immense quantities outside Halifax harbor, but did not appear to go inshore, while the purse seines were not out. About two hundred small craft were in the vicinity of Portuguese shoal during the day, the fishermen being busy "jigging" fish. Some of the men got 150 and 800. A well known Western shoreman, who was off the harbor Wednesday, said he never saw so many mackerel schooling.
The patience of the fishermen at Peggy's Cove has been abundantly rewarded. Early Tuesday morning mackerel struck in great schools. At sundown some three hundred barrels were secured in two traps and schools are seen on every hand. Other traps have been set and other big hauls are looked for. The fish taken today are of a very fine order and were purchased on the spot by Isaac and Oswald Dauphinee at 5 cents each. At 4 p. m. their gasoline auxiliary left for Halifax with 10,000 of the fish on board and at 6 o'clock the steamer "Duffern" arrived to take another cargo.
"The fish will be landed in Halifax and probably on their way to Boston before this letter appears in print. The catch represents about $3000 cash left in this place and a large number of the fishermen share therein. It is three years since mackerel in schools have been taken here and as the season has been a very dull one the people are naturally highly pleased. The catch represented two schools taken in two traps and not a fish escaped.
At Haggitt's Cove one man took 100 barrels in his trap and sold the lot for $1000. Several hundred barrels were also taken at Terrance Bay and fair hauls at Dover, Pollet Cove, by the boats.
Mackerel are scarce at Mahon and Magdalen islands.
Mackerel are taking the hook fair at Igonish.

WITH HAM FOR BAIT.

Record Catch of Smelt Made in Boston Harbor Yesterday.

Wharfinger William Nason at T wharf, Boston, made a big catch of smelts yesterday under strange circumstances, which, he says, proves that his theory that ham is good bait is true. He took George Crocker and Thomas Donohue with him to the smelting grounds off Governor's island, and for some time they fished with shrimp for bait without catching anything. Wharfinger Nason was eating a ham sandwich, and put a piece of the ham on his hooks, and immediately began to haul in fish, taking 100 dozen before his bait gave out.

DEAD HERRING.

Game Warden Wixon Gives Opinion as to Cause of Recent Trouble.

Thinks It Due Principally to Chasing by Larger Fish.

William W. Nixon, who is a warden connected with the state fish and game commission, has given out a statement as a result of his investigations of the conditions along the North Shore, particularly as to the causes for the recent invasions of hundreds of dead herring, or what are better known as "spurling." Mr. Nixon was especially deputed by Dr. Field of the state board to investigate the complaints made all along the North Shore as to the dead herring and to ascertain and report just where the fault lay.

In his statement, Mr. Nixon attributed the cause for some of the dead herring to the so-called "torchers," but said it would be unfair to ascribe to them the wholesale slaughter. It would be a physical impossibility for them to kill such heaps of herrings; a small army of dory fishermen couldn't do it. It is true that the torch fishermen have been very numerous all along the shore for the past few weeks, and it is also true that they have been taking their catch into Gloucester and the price there has gone down to a dollar a barrel, so small a return, that some of these power boat torchers have thrown their herring overboard because they could not get their price for them and would not sell at the rate offered until the fish spoiled.

The real reason, however, for the trouble, Mr. Nixon states, is due to the pollock.

Pollock are now running very plentiful all along shore just now and are growing rapidly. Awhile back it was the hake. In August, one could go out in a dory off Swampscoot and catch any amount of hake at any time. But now the hake have practically gone and it is the pollock that is driving in the herring up the harbor and into the rivers. A pollock has been known to follow herring away up on shore in its eagerness to get its natural food. He is a much bigger fish than the hake, when fully grown, and when we consider that a pollock will grow from four to five pounds to eight or ten pounds in weight, we can imagine what havoc he can create among the herring.

This trouble from dead herring is likely to occur at any time now along the North Shore and it has got to be expected and to be met by the local authorities. Other cities and towns along the North Shore are only having a repetition of what occurred earlier, while the hake were running at Salem and at Beverly. Salem went to Boston and asked for money from the board to aid in ridding that city of the nuisance caused by the dead fish, but the commission had none. They also applied from down there to the Boston board of health, since the torch fishermen came out from Boston to take the fish along their shore, and at that time it was assumed that the fishermen were to blame for the great accumulation of decaying fish. But no fishermen ever killed or could kill so many herring as were found down there. Boston had not any money and neither had the state board of health for any such purpose, so they got no satisfaction, and Lynn with its neighboring towns will have to take care of the nuisance just as Salem and Beverly did rake up the fish and bury the herring, paying whatever expense there is out of its own funds.

A great many people, said Mr. Nixon, thought that this slaughter in the water was due to some poisonous substance contained in the water due to sewerage or other matter, but Mr. Nixon believed that did not have any effect whatever, otherwise, the other fish such as pollock and hake would have been found along with the herring.
