NOVA SCOTIA HADDOCK FISHERY DISAPPOINTING

The catch of haddock along the Cape Breton coast from North Sydney to Ingonish this year has been disappointing. The smaller catch is said by some to be due to the mild spring weather this year. This theory is based on the assumption that the fish only proceed north as the temperature of the water rises and therefore that in what we call a "later" season they remain much longer on the Cape Breton coast than they do in one which is described as "early." However, whether this was the cause or not, there is no doubt that fewer haddock than usual were taken in the Ingonish district this spring.—Maritime Merchant.

Again yesterday Chief Boatswain's Mate John P. V. Jorgensen in com- mand of the U. S. coast guard patrol boat No. 151, which tied up at base 5 in East Boston, reported the creature.
Jorgensen returned from searching the waters of Massachusetts Bay for the victims of the sloop Nomad drowning. He stated that he first sighted the white whale four miles southeast of Scituate bell buoy Mon- day afternoon at 4.15. Efforts to approach the white whale as it spouted and frolicked in the water far ahead were unsuccessful, he said, but it remained in sight for half an hour.

FOUR HURT ABOARD SWORDER AT SEA WHEN TOPMAST FELL TO DECK

Four of the crew of the fishing schooner Dorothy M., swordfishing on Georges Tuesday, were slightly injured when the foretopmast broke, falling to the deck on which the men were standing.

The quartette, John Powers, Henry Tobey, Arthur Kippen and William Goodwin, were clustered around the mast, Powers being about to ascend for his turn in the lookout, when the spar let go without warning, and before the man could jump, they were knocked down by the sweep of the broken spar.

Powers and Goodwin were bruised quite badly, but the other two received only slight injuries. The vessel landed 11 fish at Newport yesterday, and came to this port last night to have a new spar stepped in place.
