NO ARRIVALS SINCE TUESDAY

NEARLY ALL OF FLEET TIED UP TO SPEND CHRISTMAS AT HOME.

No arrivals of fish of any kind have been reported here since Tuesday. Gill netters have not been out and all of the shore fleet have been in port for three days. The haddockers and draggers at Boston Wednesday came down to refit, but all remained here that the crews might spend their Christmas at home.

BOTTLE DRIFTS 6000 MILES IN THREE YEARS

A bottle cast overboard from the Boston steamer Glen White, on one of her voyages between Boston and Norfolk, on November 11, 1927, by Louis di Palma of Everett, then chief officer, was picked up on Eleuthera Island, in the Bahamas group. November 30, 1930, according to a report filed with the hydrographic office in Washington. In the three years and 19 days interval, it is estimated that the bottle drifted approximately 6000 miles. Its story will be used in the extensive study being made of ocean currents by the hydrographic office.

SAVE FISHERMEN FROM BEING DROWNED

Walter Muise, 33, a fisherman on the sch. Ellen Marshall, tied up at the Boston Fish Pier last night, fell overboard and was pulled out by Manuel E. Bradley and Fred P. Smith. They were on the pier and heard Muise fall into the water and they fished him out with a boathook.

GILL NETTERS ONLY ARRIVALS

TWO BOATS ONLY ONES OF FLEET THAT HAULED THEIR GEAR.

Two of the fleet of gill netters were the only arrivals to reach port here yesterday with fish, and by the looks of things this morning, fresh fish will be scarce over the week-end, as all small craft are in port, on account of storm warnings radioed this morning. Several of the off-shore draggers got away yesterday, however, and a couple of haddockers followed them.
