

For Release
March 18, 1938

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Boating and the weather! All seasons, except when ice is around, is boating weather for canoe or sailboat. But now in particular is the time to perform those very important duties of painting, calking, overhauling the rigging, and getting everything in shipshape. All this is keenly enjoyed by the true boat lover, for he knows that these jobs well done will add to the season's fun and may help to win a coveted trophy. The storm that is to be avoided, especially by the novice in sailing, is the thunderstorm. But fortunately these may be forecast by all who carefully watch the sky for well-known preliminary signs, and then there is time enough to reach a safe haven.
