

For Release
April 4, 1938

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Weather superstitions! Like other beliefs, true or untrue, they will persist unless we question them and try to find out the truth. It is not always the primitive and untaught who cling to superstitions, or who draw hasty and incorrect conclusions from one or two instances. Some very intelligent people do this and have superstitions. It has been found that friends, home, education, and observation, ranking in the order named, are accountable for fostering superstitions. And observation, education, home and friends, in the order named are helpful in getting rid of them. So if you have a belief about the weather which you think may not be sound, observe for yourself, also seek authority -- person or book.

*****