

For Release By Major A. H. Thiessen
June 7, 1938 Science Service Meteorologist

Tennis and weather! This tremendously popular game is a summer one. The best weather for it is warm and clear, bright and quiet. Warm, because the players should be lightly clad to facilitate the agility required in this most active of summer sports; clear and bright, to see the swiftly moving ball; quiet, because one does not like to allow for the wind. The weather all summer is suitable, but June is ideal because the days are longer and cooler on the average than later. It is clearer now than later in the season, when hazier weather is the rule, and also there are fewer thunderstorms than in the other summer months.
