

For Release
Nov. 2, 1938

By Major A.H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Climate and vigor! Some of us to thrive best require protection from the sun while others do not. The Nordics (blond people mostly) may not like the ever-changing weather of the north country with its alternating cold and warm, sun, rain, snow and fog, but nevertheless they thrive best under such conditions. Under other conditions of continuously mild weather with lots of sunshine, they lose their vigor and may eventually die out, especially if they must compete with other races whose heredity makes them more suitable for the climate. The English in the semi-tropical Bahamas do not have the vigor of the English living in the more invigorating climate of the British Isles.
