

For Release
Nov. 24, 1938

By Major A. H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

The night sky! Sympathy is felt for those who are terrorized by the unusual in nature as auroras, falling stars, and visitations by people from Mars, even though the latter be only fictitious. The psychological reaction of people not familiar with the causes, or assumed causes, indicate how frightened they may be at unusual sights and even stories. It is related that during an aurora display the peasants of Yugoslavia fell on their knees, that in England some people were disturbed. One woman rushed home in terror, and another, who even knew what was going on, did not like the red glow. Many ascribed the glow to fires; they were not frightened but called upon the fire brigade.

*****