Weather and ice hockey! Winter sports are now beginning and the late sub-freezing temperatures have done much toward putting fields in shape for ice hockey, or the old game of shinny, than which there is no faster game. Ice hockey is now frequently played in a covered hall where the floor or field is artificially flooded and frozen. But ice hockey, when played on an outside field of ice, requires sharp winter weather with several degrees of frost to assure not only a smooth hard surface necessary for the game but also to warrant safety for the players. -----
