

For release
April 1, 1939

By Major A.H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Gardens in April! April 1 was anciently observed in Great Britain as a day of general festival, and it was not until about 1700 that it was known as April-Fool's Day. The name, April, apparently refers to the season when trees and flowers begin to open, which meaning (that is, "to open") is supported by the Latin and modern Greek. In the North, April is the month for planting outside the more common vegetables, and for setting out those already started in frames; also to sow cabbage, cauliflower, and celery for late use.
