

Major A.H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Weather insurance! Insurance protection from the more violent and destructive weather elements such as hail and tornadoes has been resorted to for some time. But other weather elements less violent may be as damaging to agriculture, which requires weather insurance perhaps more than any other type of industry. Weather elements may be acutely destructive, as in a big wind, but as much actual loss may be occasioned simply by the absence of rain, or the season may just have been a bad one. If farmers could take out a blanket policy covering full or partial crop failure, their incomes would be less erratic.

(Anytime Release) -----