

For release By Major A.H. Thiessen
July 24, 1940 Science Service Meteorologist

Air sciences! Flying sciences have expanded rapidly, due to new applications and greater outlook. Now, there are students of the highways of the air -- a new kind of geography, Physicians examine men and women to ascertain their fitness to become pilots, and they also study new ailments peculiar to flying. Agriculture makes use of the airplane to dust the crops against pests. Airplanes are used by geologists and explorers to map the earth indicating all details such as rivers and intricate shorelines. Underwater obstructions and even schools of fishes may be located. Weather science also has been greatly expanded and its usefulness increased.
