

For release
Jan. 22, 1941

By Major A.H. Thiessen
Science Service Meteorologist

Snow-blindness! This very painful ailment is caused by the excessive glare from snow. Eskimos wear shades over their eyes, which mitigate the intensity of the glare, and these people escape the suffering from this trouble. Recovery is effected under proper treatment in a few days. A story is told of a division of soldiers in Peru marching in a snow district when all but the guides were struck blind. The guides galloped to the nearest Indian villages, and with the help of a hundred Indians led the soldiers safely to camp, with the exception of some, who, due to their blindness, fell down precipices and were never recovered.
